Gorongosa Province Gorongosa () is one of five provinces of the south-western Huila Department of southern Angola. The capital of the province is the city of Huambo. The province covers an area of and has a population of 411,800 people. Geography Gorongosa contains the Ámbongo and Gorongosa Mountain, which are tectonic uplifts on the volcanic cone of Mount Cameroon. The province contains a great number of lakes, the largest of which are: Khami (Lukula Plateau) Lukula (The Belt of Lakes) Camalala (The Heart of Miraculous Mountains) Camela (The Bog of Fresh Streams) Lomango (The Great Greenfield) Mbuila (The Crown of Miraculous Rivers) Nature The Benguela ecosystem, a large continuous tropical river system, is the main river system in Gorongosa. This is a huge continuous river system and flows into the Atlantic Ocean. This ecosystem has been cleared for farmland and is very different from its forest-covered state. It is vital for the survival of the Gorongosa ecosystem. Another reason for its destruction is the clearing for towns and farmlands. The swampy areas are filled in with pines. The rainy seasons are the most productive, with the cool and dry season in the winter. The swamps dry up and the grass becomes more sparse. Location The province is bordered to the north by Huila Province, to the east by Huambo and U f30f4ceada
