Napolitano (41st) said recently that Chicago's economic growth is being slowed by the city's failure to reach out to the commercial real estate business, which he said has a negative impact on neighboring communities. "So I think that the city needs to wake up and figure out a way to be real with everyone," Napolitano said at a May 11 meeting of the Montrose Chamber of Commerce. Napolitano (41st), who will be succeeded by Bea Wojcicki in December after he lost a close election, said that his decision to seek aldermanic office involved a trade-off between business interests and the values of alderman. "And I'm like a lot of small business owners, who in the end always side with the alderman because we get no extra favors when we meet with them, but we get a lot of attention when we meet with them," he said. "And (the business owners) just got tired of that model."

Napolitano said that some of the work he has done as alderman has been to increase the number of city staff assigned to the public right-of-way and the police. The city should do more to appeal to the community college and high school students who are creating many of the summer jobs for area residents, he said. Napolitano said that he was not sure how much it would cost to increase the number of city workers assigned to the right-of-way. "But it can't cost much, since it's an easy task," he said. "It's almost like a blank sheet of paper," Napolitano said. "It'
