Golden State Warriors are not in the NBA Playoffs. But they can make a lot of noise in the race for the NBA's Western Conference title. The Warriors, despite being the oldest team in the postseason at 35 years old, have come into the playoffs with some of the best history of any team in history. (It's also against the odds that the Warriors could make it all the way, but still, it's the truth.) The Warriors seem up to the challenge: 1.) They are the NBA's first-ever 35-win playoff team. 2.) They are the second-youngest team in the playoffs. 3.) They have the second-best playoff-best defense in the West. 4.) They have the best regular-season record for a No. 8 seed in the postseason. 5.) The Warriors have been to six NBA Finals and lost to five different teams, making them perhaps the most fearsome postseason nemesis in NBA history. 6.) They are now 5-1 this postseason. All this to say, the Warriors are the favorite to win the 2015 NBA championship. So this post isn't meant to say they will win a championship or anything of the sort. Also, I'm pretty sure the Warriors haven't won a title this year, but they're (honestly) pretty nice NBA contestants. Here's a full look at the playoff-worthy features of the Warriors' roster: 1. Golden State is the oldest team in the playoffs, but Golden State, which celebrated its golden anniversary last season, has the third-most playoff wins of any team in the NBA's history (304). The Warriors are 2-1 in the first round, and they are 2-0 against the Houston Rockets and Los Angeles Clippers, who lost in the same postseason last year. The Warriors have never lost in the playoffs after winning the first two games (or any two games in the first two rounds), which has occurred just seven times in the past 70 years. 2. Golden State is also the second-youngest team in the playoffs. The first-round series between the Warriors and Rockets is the second-youngest in the NBA Playoffs.
