21st-Hispanic-PTA, PTA in Spanish, 10:30 a.m..Q: Streams() hides the errors when transforming objects into a collection I have a method which I have to transform an instance of my class into a collection. This is my function: `def transformToCollection(self, item: Any): list(item, self.parse, self.build)` This works fine: `with self.streams(): items = self.transformToCollection(fear) for item in items: print(fear, item)` But this raises an error: `with self.streams(): items = list(self.transformToCollection(fear)) for item in items: print(fear, item)` `TypeError: 'generator' object is not callable` Why does it behave like that? I am using `streams()` because I want to only allocate memory for the memory the collector will need (`self.streams()` is called before the for loop). What I want is to return some results from the stream, not to consume memory. A: `streams()` returns a generator - as such you will need to iterate over it like so: `with self.streams(): items = list(self.transformToCollection(fear)) for item in items: print(fear, item)` If you want to pass those items on to somewhere else you would have to explicitly yield them: `def foo(): with self.streams(): items = list(self.transformToCollection(fear)) for item in items: print(fear, item) yield items` for item in `foo(): print(fear, item)` Hyperlipidemia, hyperlipoproteinemia, hypercholesterolemia, and obesity are conditions that are related to many diseases and conditions. For example, serum cholesterol elevations result in increased blood clotting which
